The long shadow of Lenin's 'worse is better'

April 23, 1980

By Albert L. Weeks, Albert L. Weeks is a professor at New York University and has written two books on Soviet affairs.

Vladimir Ilyich Lenin used the simple phrase "worse is better" or "the worse, the better" as his slogan in Czarist Russia to cheer on chaos and the destruction of the existing order to impose his brand of socialism.

Once Free West Has Lusted After China's One-Party Rule

Our One-Party Democracy

By Thomas L. Friedman

Sept. 8, 2009

Watching both the health care and climate/energy debates in Congress, it is hard not to draw the following conclusion: There is only one thing worse than one-party autocracy, and that is one-party democracy, which is what we have in America today.

One-party autocracy certainly has its drawbacks. But when it is led by a reasonably enlightened group of people, as China is today, it can also have great advantages. That one party can just impose the politically difficult but critically important policies needed to move a society forward in the 21st century. It is not an accident that China is committed to overtaking us in electric cars, solar power,

UN Climate Chief Christiana Figueres laments U.S. democracy is 'very detrimental' in war on global warming — Lauds one-party ruled China for 'doing it right' on climate change

Bloomberg News: The political divide in the U.S. Congress has slowed efforts to pass climate legislation and is 'very detrimental' to the fight against global warming, she said.

'China, the top emitter of greenhouse gases, is also the country that's "doing it right" when it comes to addressing global warming, the United Nations' chief climate official said.' 'China is also able to implement policies because its political system avoids some of the legislative hurdles seen in countries including the U.S., Figueres said.'

Apple CEO Praises China

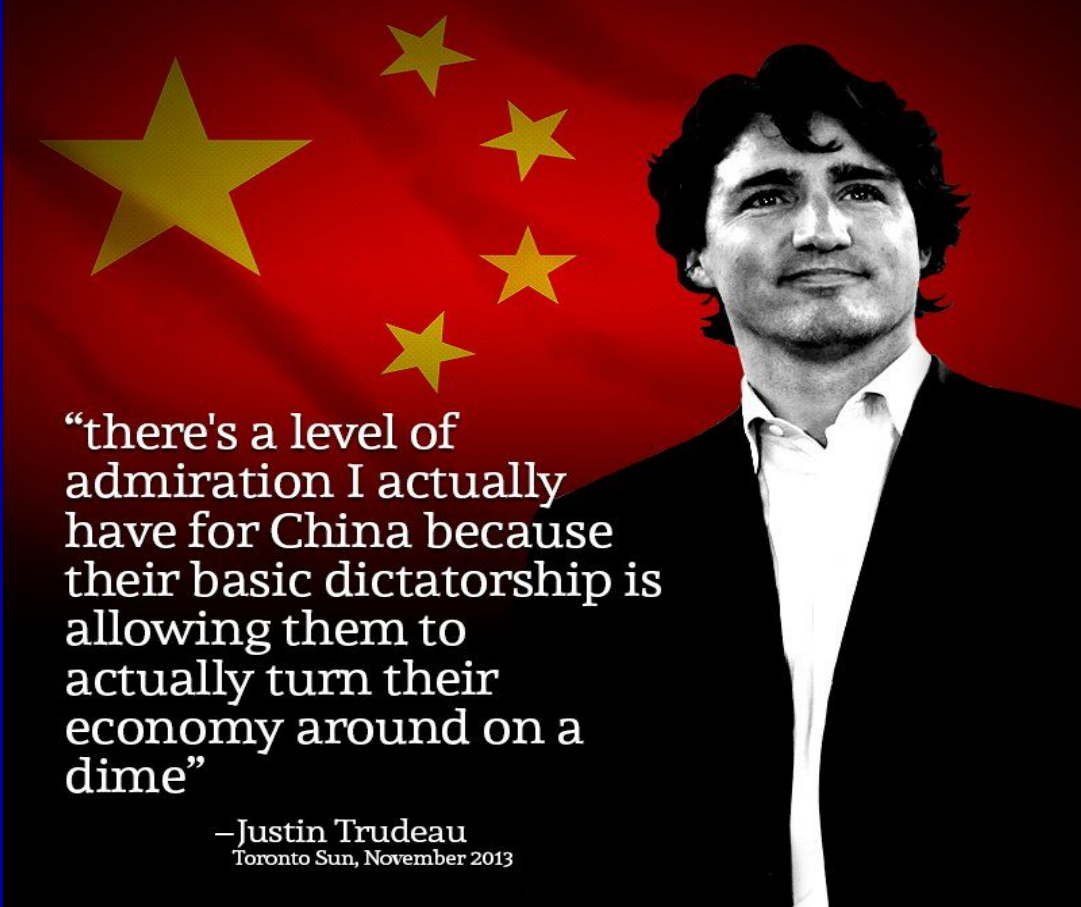

Apple CEO Tim Cook claimed China 'aligns completely with Apple's values' on climate – Cook defended CCP as 'very fixated on doing the right things to avert climate change'

Tucker Carlson: Apple is now an active collaborator with China's murderous police state

Video from 2017 of Apple's CEO, Tim Cook: TIM COOK: "China has done an unbelievable job of lifting people out of poverty. They've done an incredible job and far beyond what any country has done. We were talking about 19, mid-90's to today, the biggest change is the number of people that have been pulled out of poverty by far and we should all applaud that and we should all feel good about it and so there are, and the environmental leadership today, is very clear and it aligns completely with Apple's values."

QUESTION: "The Chinese environmental league, the government?"

COOK: "Yes, I mean they're very fixated on doing the right things to avert climate change."

South Australia also has broad powers under its major emergency declaration, which has recently been extended until September 19.

Authorised officers can:

- Break into any land, building, structure or vehicle using whatever force necessary
- Direct or prohibit the movement of people, animals or vehicles
- Put people in quarantine
- Order people to undergo medical exams, tests or treatment
- Compel people to give information

Police in uniform don't have to show their credentials before exercising these powers.

A STERILITY DRUG IN FOOD IS HINTED

Biologist Stresses Need to Curb Population Growth

By GLADWIN HILL
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 24—A possibility that the Government might have to put sterility drugs in reservoirs and in food shipped to foreign countries to limit human multiplication was envisioned today by a leading crusader on the population problem.

The crusader, Dr. Paul Ehrlich of Stanford University, among a number of commentators who called attention to the "population crisis" as the United States Commission for Unesco opened its 13th national conference here today.

Blacks Fear Population Control as 'Genocide'

By CARL ROWAN

WASHINGTON — Several days ago most of the black delegates walked out of the National Congress on Optimum Population and Environment in Chicago.

They expressed fears that the meeting would further compulsory population controls which would result in the "preconceived, vicious" extermination of blacks, other non-whites, and poor Americans.

It would be easy — and foolish — to dismiss this walkout as a stunt by radicals and nincompoops.

That walkout touched one of the rawest nerves in the whole population-environment movement in America. The fears and suspicions that motivated it will have to be erased before population control goes far among the nation's poor minorities, and before anyone can talk realistically or hopefully about saving this planet.

In the strict context of that Chicago conference, black fears of "genocide" seem absurd. The Congress brought together about as liberal a bunch of white adults and young people as you can find in one spot these days. Most of the delegates were people long committed to dealing with America's social, racial, and economic injustices as part of solving the larger problem of environment. Very few, if any, would advocate compulsory sterilization or any other coercive techniques to limit births among special groups of Americans.

But given a context broader than that Chicago meeting, these black fears seem a lot less irrational, and they need to be studied.

Dr. Paul R. Ehrlich, Stanford University biologist and chief guru of the suddenly massive population-environment lobby, says: "There is no reason blacks ought to be concerned with saving a world they don't have a piece of."

This idea is dominant as the black community tries to place the item of "population control" on its list of priorities. The black delegates in Chicago issued a statement saying that "the elimination of dangerous species such as rats, roaches, and other vermin is of more immediate concern to the black people than the preservation of brook trout, buffalo, and bald eagles."

Climate Lockdowns: New CO2 monitoring credit card enables tracking of 'carbon footprint on every purchase' – 'Monitors & cuts off spending when we hit our carbon max' – Mastercard & UN join forces

What it would mean for Biden to declare a national ‘climate emergency’ – ‘Triggers ability for him to deploy around 130 different powers’

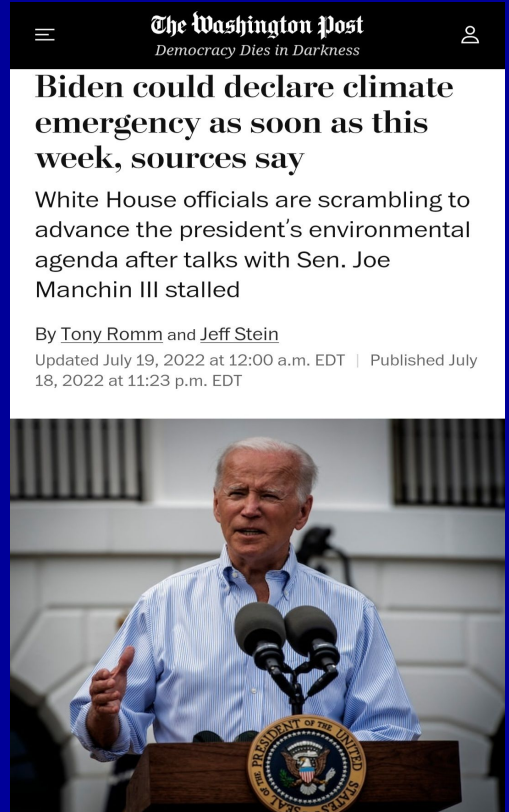

U.S. presidents have declared 60 national emergencies since 1976, according to the think tank Demos. Historically, those have typically been for acute crises, such as specific natural disasters, rather than a long-term predicament like climate change. ...

“If he declares a national emergency, it triggers the ability for him to deploy around 130 different powers,” Jean Su, energy justice program director and senior attorney at the Center for Biological Diversity, said.

Biden could stop "the export of crude oil...phase out all exports and imports of fossil fuels entirely...stop issuing permits for offshore oil and gas wells under already existing leases and halt all drilling immediately...marshaling funding under the DPA to deploy clean energy — for example, rooftop solar installations on low-income housing."

Abstract

Here we discuss how personal carbon allowances (PCAs) could play a role in achieving ambitious climate mitigation targets. We argue that recent advances in AI for sustainable development, together with the need for a low-carbon recovery from the COVID-19 crisis, open a new window of opportunity for PCAs. Furthermore, we present design principles based on the Sustainable Development Goals for the future adoption of PCAs. We conclude

Town of Louisville enacts 'emergency' ban on new gas stations; initiative seeks to make move permanent

LOUISVILLE—If government officials can't force you to purchase an electric vehicle, it appears they'll simply ban your ability to fuel your internal combustion engine car.

At least, that seems to be the tactic taken by the town of Louisville. Last Tuesday, with little fanfare, the town council voted 5-2 on an emergency ordinance to institute a temporary moratorium on accepting or approving new applications to build a gas station anywhere within the town.
